CLIC

THE PRACTICAL LINKEDIN GUIDE

LINKEDIN FOUNDATION PLAYBOOK

Build trust. Grow your network.
Create meaningful opportunities.

BY COACH RAVIKANT
Authority & LinkedIn Growth Strategy

THE FOUNDATION EDITION / 2026

START HERE / YOUR ROADMAP

Inside the Playbook

Six focused chapters. One practical journey from a clearer profile to stronger professional relationships.

01 Getting Started with LinkedIn — 05
Know the platform. Build a relevant network. Start real conversations.

02 Build a Powerful LinkedIn Profile — 14
Photo, banner, headline, About, experience, skills and proof.

03 Content That Builds Authority — 24
Useful ideas, original posts, storytelling and engagement-first publishing.

04 Grow the Right Network — 34
Who to approach, how to contribute and when to connect.

05 Turn Connections into Opportunities — 44
Warm conversations, contextual follow-ups and appropriate offers.

06 Your LinkedIn Growth Discipline — 54
One repeatable 30-minute routine for leads, careers and authority.

COPYRIGHT & PERMITTED USE

© 2026 Coach Ravikant Rathor. All rights reserved. CLIC™. Licensed for individual learning and internal professional use. Full terms appear near the end of this book.

MEET YOUR GUIDE

About Coach Ravikant

Founder of Foxxy Digital Tools, ScanMySocial & CR Academy • Creator of the CLIC™ Framework

COACH RAVIKANT

Coach Ravikant is the founder of Foxxy Digital Tools, ScanMySocial and CR Academy, and the creator of the CLIC™ Framework. His work connects authority-building, personal branding, AI and practical business systems—helping professionals and businesses turn expertise into trust and meaningful opportunities.

His guiding belief is simple: genuine expertise should not remain invisible or unrewarded.

This playbook brings that belief to LinkedIn. Instead of chasing vanity metrics or copying viral formulas, it teaches readers how to communicate their value, participate thoughtfully, and build a network that supports real career or business goals.

THE PHILOSOPHY BEHIND CLIC™

CONTENT	LEADS	INFLUENCE	CLIENTS
Show useful expertise	Attract relevant interest	Build trust through value	Create suitable opportunities

A NOTE FROM THE AUTHOR

I want you to understand what to do before feeling pressured to do everything. Start with genuine expertise, real conversations and small, consistent actions. The stronger system comes later.

The CLIC™ Framework connects content, leads, influence and clients. This independent educational playbook shares the foundational thinking behind that approach.

BEFORE YOU BEGIN

A practical playbook, not another course

You do not need to spend hours mastering LinkedIn before you can take one useful step.

This book is for people who want LinkedIn to support an actual goal: finding a job, advancing a career, attracting clients or earning a reputation for their expertise. It focuses on the fundamentals that remain useful even when features and algorithms change.

How to read it

01 READ

Understand the principle in a few clear paragraphs.

02 BORROW

Use the example, ready-made message or AI prompt that fits your situation.

03 APPLY

Try one useful action in your own LinkedIn account.

04 REPEAT

Build a simple habit instead of chasing daily hacks.

Choose the example closest to your goal

YOUR GOAL	WHAT TO LOOK FOR
Find a job	Recruiters, alumni, hiring teams and the work you hope to do.
Grow your career	Peers, mentors, professional communities and visible expertise.
Find clients	Relevant business challenges, decision-makers and credible proof.
Build your brand	Niche conversations, useful ideas and consistent contributions.

A PROMISE TO THE READER

You will never be asked to fill pages of worksheets. You will learn a principle, see a realistic situation, and get a clear next move. Not every approach will work for everyone; adapt what fits your context.

YOUR OPTIONAL SALES NAVIGATOR ACCELERATOR If your offer includes one month of Sales Navigator Advanced, use the accompanying 7-Day Quick-Start Guide to research relevant people, save leads and explore alerts. The playbook also works without a paid subscription.

Editorial note: The people and conversations used in examples are illustrative. Strategy names are teaching tools, not guaranteed ways to increase reach. The playbook is not affiliated with or endorsed by LinkedIn.

CLIC™ / LINKEDIN FOUNDATION PLAYBOOK

CHAPTER

01

Getting Started with LinkedIn

Know the platform. Build a network that matters.

IN THIS CHAPTER

- Understand connections and followers
- Choose the right people to connect with
- Start conversations with genuine context

Strong relationships begin with relevance.

CHAPTER 01 / UNDERSTAND THE PLATFORM

Getting Started with LinkedIn

Build the right network before chasing bigger numbers.

LinkedIn is not just a place to upload your CV, collect connections or publish posts. It is a place where professional trust can begin—often through one useful conversation.

COACH RAVIKANT'S FIRST RULE

Do not begin by asking, "How can I reach 10,000 connections?" Begin by asking, "Which people would make my professional network genuinely useful—and how can I contribute to their conversations?"

By the end of this chapter, you will know:

- How LinkedIn works Your profile, feed and network have different jobs.
- What connection numbers mean Understand 500+, 1,000 and the 30,000 cap.
- Who belongs in your network Know when to connect, follow or simply learn.
- How to approach someone naturally Use a genuine post interaction instead of a generic pitch.
- Where to begin today A simple 20-minute starter routine.

COACH RAVIKANT'S FIELD NOTE

Your first goal is not to become famous. It is to become clear, credible and relevant to the people who matter for your professional direction.

CHAPTER 01 / THE BASICS

Think of LinkedIn as three places in one

01

Your profile is your first impression

When someone sees your comment or receives your invitation, they may open your profile. It should quickly explain who you are, what you do and why your work matters.

02

Your feed is a professional conversation

People share questions, experiences, lessons and opinions. Reading and contributing to the right discussions can be a better beginning than publishing into an empty room.

03

Your network is a relationship map

Connections help you stay in touch. Following lets you learn from people you do not know. Neither number, on its own, proves trust or influence.

Your purpose changes what you notice

IF YOUR GOAL IS...	PAY ATTENTION TO...
Finding a job	Recruiters, hiring managers, alumni, relevant companies and people doing the work you want.
Career growth	Skilled colleagues, mentors, industry voices and useful professional communities.
Finding clients	Customers, decision-makers, partners and conversations about problems you can solve.
Building authority	Questions, debates and recurring challenges within your area of expertise.

DO THIS TODAY

Open your feed and ask: “Am I seeing the people and ideas relevant to my goal?” If not, the next pages show how to improve it gradually.

CHAPTER 01 / CONNECTION BASICS

Connections, followers and network degrees

The labels beside names describe your network distance—not someone's importance.

TERM	WHAT IT MEANS
1st-degree	You have accepted each other's connection invitation. Direct messaging is generally available.
2nd-degree	You share at least one first-degree connection but are not directly connected.
3rd-degree	The person is linked through someone in your second-degree network.
Follower	Someone who chooses to see your public posts without necessarily connecting.
Following	You choose to see someone's public content; it does not create a two-way connection.

Connect, follow or engage first?

CONNECT

When you recognize and trust someone professionally: a former colleague, known alumnus, client, mentor or real-world contact.

FOLLOW

When you want to learn from someone's posts but do not yet have a professional relationship.

ENGAGE FIRST

For unfamiliar people, read their work and contribute sincerely if you have a relevant perspective. A meaningful exchange may create a reason to connect later.

A thoughtful comment is not permission to enter someone's private network. If an invitation is not welcome, keep the interaction public and professional. Invitation and messaging options depend on account settings.

CHAPTER 01 / THE NUMBERS

What do 500, 1,000 and 30,000 really mean?

Connection counts are easy to see. Relationship quality is harder to measure—and usually more useful.

MILESTONE	PRACTICAL MEANING
First 500	A reasonable early network-building reference point. LinkedIn displays 500+ around this milestone; it is not a verified algorithm reward.
1,000	A larger relevant network can offer more people to learn from and reconnect with. There is no official automatic reach boost at 1,000.
30,000	The maximum number of first-degree LinkedIn connections. It is a platform limit, not a recommended target for everybody.

Here is how I would judge network quality instead

Imagine two consultants. One has 7,000 unrelated connections and rarely speaks to potential buyers. Another has 800 relevant connections, including past clients, collaborators and decision-makers who recognize their work.

You cannot judge their business prospects from connection count alone. But the second person has a more useful foundation for real professional conversations.

COACH RAVIKANT'S RULE

Grow your connections where trust makes sense. Grow your followers where learning and visibility make sense. Do not confuse the two.

LinkedIn may update its features and limits. We distinguish platform facts from practitioner recommendations throughout this playbook.

CHAPTER 01 / SIGNATURE METHOD

The Three-Circle Network

You do not need to approach everyone. Start with the people nearest to your professional world.

01

People who already know you

Former colleagues, classmates, clients, mentors, vendors, collaborators and other real professional contacts. Often the easiest place to reconnect.

02

People who share your professional world

Peers, community members, complementary providers and people working on similar problems. Build familiarity through useful exchanges.

03

People whose work you want to follow

Potential clients, founders, hiring leaders, specialists and thoughtful industry voices. Follow and learn before asking for direct access.

Where different people can start

READER	FIRST MOVES
Job seeker	Reconnect with known alumni and classmates; follow relevant recruiters and hiring teams.
Professional	Connect with trusted colleagues; follow respected specialists and useful communities.
Consultant	Reconnect with past clients and peers; follow founders discussing problems you solve.
Founder	Stay close to partners and customers; learn from relevant decision-makers.

CHAPTER 01 / MAKE GOOD DECISIONS

Be warm in conversation. Selective with connections.

Being approachable does not mean accepting every invitation.

SITUATION	GOOD FIRST MOVE
You know them from work	Connect if you recognize and trust them.
You met at an event	Connect with a specific reminder of the conversation.
You admire their expertise	Follow and learn first; interact where you have something to add.
A stranger likes your post	Review their context. You can continue publicly without connecting.
A suspicious or aggressive account	Ignore, block or report as appropriate.

Three connection notes that feel natural

FORMER COLLEAGUE

Hi [Name], good to see you here. I still remember working together on [real project or team]. It would be great to stay connected.

SOMEONE YOU MET RECENTLY

Hi [Name], I enjoyed our discussion at [event] about [topic]. Glad to continue the conversation here.

SOMEONE WHOSE ADVICE HELPED

Hi [Name], your advice on [topic] was genuinely useful. Thank you. I would be glad to stay in touch.

Always use a real reason to connect. Never invent a meeting, shared experience or familiarity simply to make a message sound personal.

CHAPTER 01 / RELATIONSHIP-FIRST STRATEGY

The Post-to-Conversation Bridge

A better opening is often a thoughtful contribution—not an invitation from a stranger.

Meet Neha, a fictional freelance operations consultant. She sees a founder post: “Our sales team gets inquiries, but we lose track of who needs a follow-up.” Because she works with business processes, she has a genuine perspective to add.

FORGET GENERIC PRAISE

“Great post! Completely agree.”

WHAT NEHA ACTUALLY CONTRIBUTES

“One thing I’ve noticed in small teams is that a follow-up problem can really be an ownership problem. If nobody owns the next step, even a good CRM will not fix it. How do you assign ownership today?”

If the founder responds, Neha can keep talking publicly. If the exchange becomes meaningful and welcome, she can send a contextual connection note:

CONTEXTUAL CONNECTION NOTE

Hi [Name], I enjoyed our exchange about follow-up ownership. Your point about [specific detail] gave me something to think about. Would be glad to stay connected.

WHAT NEHA DOES NOT DO

She does not pretend to agree, repeatedly comment for attention, or send a brochure immediately. She earns context before asking for time.

The purpose is not to turn every connection into a prospect. It is to build genuine professional relationships from useful conversations.

CHAPTER 01 / PUT IT INTO PRACTICE

Your first 20 minutes on LinkedIn

Start here before worrying about posting schedules, software or connection targets.

WHEN	YOUR NEXT MOVE
Minutes 0–5	Check that your name, current role and photo are recognizable. Chapter 02 will improve the full profile.
Minutes 5–10	Find two or three people you genuinely know through work, education or collaboration. Reconnect naturally.
Minutes 10–15	Follow a few relevant people or companies you do not know personally. Notice what they discuss.
Minutes 15–20	Read one relevant post. Contribute a thoughtful comment only if you have something real to add.

Use AI as an editor, never as a substitute for experience

COPY-READY PROMPT FOR CHATGPT OR CLAUDE

Act as my LinkedIn communication editor. I read this post: [POST OR SUMMARY]. My genuine view is: [MY VIEW]. My real experience is: [TRUE CONTEXT]. Suggest two short comments—one offering a practical insight and one asking a thoughtful question. Do not invent experience, familiarity or agreement. Keep my natural voice. I will review before posting.

YOUR FIRST WIN

You can identify the people relevant to your goal, recognize the conversations that matter and contribute without sounding like a stranger asking for a favour.

NEXT CHAPTER / Build a Powerful LinkedIn Profile

Every meaningful interaction creates a new question: what will someone find when they click your name? Chapter 02 will help you make that first impression count.

Platform notes: LinkedIn Help guidance on network degrees, following, 500+ display, connection caps and authentic engagement. Reviewed October 2026. This independent educational publication is not affiliated with or endorsed by LinkedIn. Illustrative examples are fictional.

CLIC™ / LINKEDIN FOUNDATION PLAYBOOK

CHAPTER

02

Build a Powerful LinkedIn Profile

Make your expertise clear the moment someone visits.

IN THIS CHAPTER

- Create a professional first impression
- Write a clear headline and About section
- Show real work and a natural next step

Your profile should make your value easy to understand.

CHAPTER 02 / YOUR PROFESSIONAL FIRST IMPRESSION

Build a Powerful LinkedIn Profile

When someone clicks your name, give them a good reason to stay.

Imagine you leave a thoughtful comment on a founder's post. The founder likes your perspective and clicks your name. In a few seconds, they want to know: Who is this person? What do they actually do? Can I trust their experience?

COACH RAVIKANT'S 5-SECOND PROFILE PROMISE

A visitor should be able to understand your professional direction and why you may be relevant—without reading your entire career history.

The three questions your profile should answer

- Who are you? A clear role, area of expertise or professional direction.
- Why should I believe you? Relevant experience, real projects, thoughtful work or recommendations.
- What can I do next? Connect, explore your work, contact you or learn more—as appropriate for your goal.

Optimize in this order—not every field at once

START HERE	THEN BUILD
First impression	Profile photo • banner • headline
The story	About section • current experience
Reasons to trust	Skills • genuine results • projects • recommendations
The next step	Contact details • proof links • appropriate invitation

COACH RAVIKANT'S FIELD NOTE

A great profile is not the longest profile. It is the one that helps the right visitor understand your professional value quickly.

CHAPTER 02 / THE VISUAL INTRODUCTION

Your photo and banner should do two jobs

Help visitors recognize you—and understand the professional world you belong to.

1 / Profile photograph: recognizable beats “perfect”

Use a current photo where your face is easy to recognize. Choose clean lighting, a simple background and clothing appropriate to the people you want to work with. A smartphone portrait with good light can work well; an expensive studio shoot is not required.

DO THIS	AVOID THIS
Use a sharp, current photograph. Keep your face prominent and natural. Check the small circular crop.	Group crops, heavy filters, misleading AI-generated facial changes, tiny faces and distracting text.

Technical check: LinkedIn accepts profile images from 400 × 400 pixels and recommends a 1584 × 396-pixel background image. Check current upload requirements in LinkedIn Help before exporting.

2 / Banner: make your professional direction visible

The banner is not a newspaper advertisement. One short message, one supporting idea and generous space are usually enough. Always preview on a phone; your photo and screen size can cover or crop parts of the design.

EASY BANNER FORMULA

[WHAT YOU DO / YOUR EXPERTISE] • [WHO OR WHAT YOU FOCUS ON] • [OPTIONAL NEXT STEP]

YOUR GOAL	SAMPLE BANNER MESSAGE
Job seeker	Aspiring Data Analyst | SQL • Excel • Power BI | Projects & learning
Professional	Operations & Process Improvement | Helping teams work better
Consultant	Simpler Sales Follow-Up Systems for Service Businesses | Let’s connect
Founder	Building Better Customer Experiences | Founder • [Business Name]

COACH RAVIKANT'S FIELD NOTE

Make the banner easy to read. If your headline already says everything, a clean image that reinforces your field is better than repeating ten claims.

CHAPTER 02 / THE HEADLINE

Your headline is a promise—not a job title dump

The headline appears beyond your profile, including search results and connection contexts.

A headline like “CEO | Founder | Growth | Leadership | AI | Speaker” may sound impressive, but it does not always tell a reader what you actually bring to the table. Lead with clarity, not a collection of labels.

THE CLEAR-HEADLINE FORMULA

[YOUR ROLE / EXPERTISE] | [WHO OR WHAT YOU WORK WITH] | [VALUE / SPECIALISM]

Four ways this sounds in practice

READER	CLEAR HEADLINE EXAMPLE
Job seeker	Entry-Level Data Analyst	SQL, Excel & Dashboard Projects	Interested in Business Insights
Professional	Customer Success Manager	B2B Onboarding & Retention	Improving Customer Experience
Consultant	Operations Consultant	Helping Service Businesses Improve Sales Follow-Up & Team Workflows
Founder	Founder, [Brand]	Building Practical AI Tools for Small Business Teams

Here is a better before-and-after

BEFORE

“Consultant | Entrepreneur | Speaker | Passionate About Growth”

AFTER

“Business Process Consultant | Helping Service Teams Organize Follow-Ups & Reduce Missed Opportunities”

The second version is more specific. It tells a potential buyer what sort of problem this person understands. This does not guarantee more views; it improves the information available to the visitor.

COACH RAVIKANT'S RULE

If a relevant person sees only your photo, name and headline, they should still understand why you may be worth speaking to.

LinkedIn allows headlines up to 220 characters, but they may appear truncated on smaller surfaces. Put the most important words first.

CHAPTER 02 / YOUR PROFESSIONAL STORY

Write an About section people want to finish

Be specific, honest and easy to understand. No corporate autobiography required.

Think of your About section as an introduction at a thoughtful professional gathering. You would not open with a list of adjectives. You would explain what you do, the problems you understand, the experience you bring and where a conversation might lead.

A simple five-part structure

- Opening State your professional direction or the challenge you care about.
- Audience or context Say whom you serve, work with, or hope to contribute to.
- What you actually do Describe your skills and approach in everyday language.
- Proof Add a true project, responsibility, lesson or verifiable result.
- Invitation Give an appropriate reason to connect or start a conversation.

COPY-READY ABOUT STRUCTURE

I am a [ROLE / PROFESSIONAL DIRECTION] focused on [AREA OF EXPERTISE].

I work with / I am interested in [PEOPLE, INDUSTRY OR PROBLEM]. My strengths include [2–3 REAL SKILLS], and I have applied them through [REAL ROLE, PROJECT OR EXPERIENCE].

One example of my work is [TRUE PROJECT / RESPONSIBILITY / OBSERVABLE RESULT].

I enjoy conversations about [RELEVANT TOPICS]. If you work in this space, [APPROPRIATE INVITATION].

If you are early in your career, it is perfectly acceptable to mention a college project, volunteer responsibility, internship or current learning. Never invent client results or years of experience to make your profile sound senior.

COACH RAVIKANT'S FIELD NOTE

Write your first two lines for the person who arrived from your comment. They need a clear introduction, not a grand personal slogan.

CHAPTER 02 / REALISTIC ABOUT EXAMPLES

Two profiles. Two different stories.

These examples are fictional. Adapt the structure—not the biography.

Neha — freelance operations consultant

EXAMPLE: AN ABOUT SECTION THAT INVITES A RELEVANT CONVERSATION

I help small service teams bring more clarity to their daily operations.

My focus is the work that happens after a customer inquiry: assigning ownership, tracking follow-ups and making handovers easier for busy teams.

I work with practical process maps, simple reporting and team workflows. A recent independent project involved documenting a manual enquiry process and identifying where tasks were being missed.

I share observations about sales operations, customer experience and the small systems that make work easier. If you work on these challenges, I would enjoy exchanging ideas.

Notice what Neha does not say: she does not claim “10X revenue” or “500+ clients.” The description shows an area of competence and a real type of project she can support.

Aarav — early-career data analyst

EXAMPLE: RELEVANT EVEN BEFORE A FULL-TIME ROLE

I am building a career in data analysis with a focus on turning raw information into clear business decisions.

Through coursework and personal projects, I have worked with Excel, SQL and Power BI. One portfolio project explored sales patterns in a public dataset and presented the findings in a simple dashboard.

I am interested in entry-level analyst opportunities and conversations with people working in data, reporting and business intelligence. I am always open to constructive feedback on my work.

COACH RAVIKANT'S FIELD NOTE

A good About section sounds like one real person. It does not need to sound like every LinkedIn coach on the internet.

CHAPTER 02 / EVIDENCE OF WORK

Experience should tell a story of contribution

Your responsibilities matter. Your actions and results make them easier to understand.

Many people paste a job description under each position. That tells visitors what the role usually involves—not what you actually contributed. Keep the role accurate, then add a few specific lines about work you did.

EXPERIENCE BULLET FORMULA

[ACTION YOU TOOK] + [CONTEXT / PROBLEM] + [OBSERVABLE RESULT OR LEARNING].

See the difference

VAGUE	SPECIFIC
"Responsible for customer service and daily coordination."	"Coordinated incoming customer requests, tracked handovers and improved visibility of unresolved cases for the team."

READER	HONEST EXPERIENCE OR PROJECT EXAMPLE
Job seeker	Built a Power BI dashboard using a public sales dataset; documented assumptions and findings in a portfolio post.
Professional	Worked with operations and support teams to standardize weekly reporting and clarify ownership of customer requests.
Consultant	Mapped an inquiry-to-follow-up process for a small business and recommended simpler handoffs.
Founder	Led early product discovery interviews and used customer feedback to refine an onboarding flow.

No traditional job experience yet?

Use the Projects, Education or Volunteer Experience sections to show genuine work. Keep organization names, dates and results accurate. Do not list an independent practice assignment as a paid client project.

COACH RAVIKANT'S PRACTICAL TEST / Could you clearly explain what you personally contributed if someone asked? If yes, the example belongs in your professional story.

CHAPTER 02 / CREDIBILITY THAT TRAVELS

Skills, proof and recommendations

Make your claims easy to believe by showing appropriate evidence.

Choose skills that match the opportunities you want

LinkedIn currently supports up to 100 skills, but your goal is not to use all 100. Start with a focused set of skills you can demonstrate. Put the most relevant capabilities first and connect them to actual experience where possible.

AN EASY SKILL SELECTION METHOD

List 3 core skills in your work + 3 tools or methods you actually use + 3 skills relevant to your next opportunity. Remove vague or unearned claims.

Show proof, not just adjectives

PROOF TYPE	PRACTICAL EXAMPLE
Project	One good project document or portfolio case study.
Work sample	A presentation, article, dashboard, design or short demonstration.
Recommendation	A genuine testimonial from someone who has worked with you.
Relevant credential	A completed, verifiable course or qualification.

Use the Featured section, Projects section or appropriate profile links when available to your account. LinkedIn may change how Featured content is displayed or which options require particular subscriptions. A portfolio or project description remains valuable even without a particular feature.

A RESPECTFUL RECOMMENDATION REQUEST

Hi [Name], I appreciated working with you on [REAL PROJECT]. I am updating my LinkedIn profile to better reflect my work in [AREA]. If you feel comfortable, would you be willing to share a short recommendation about [SPECIFIC CONTRIBUTION YOU OBSERVED]? No pressure at all—thank you either way.

COACH RAVIKANT'S FIELD NOTE

One specific example of good work is more persuasive than five unsupported claims. Choose evidence the visitor can understand and verify.

CHAPTER 02 / THE NEXT CONVERSATION

Make it easy for the right person to reach you

A clear profile without an appropriate next step leaves the visitor guessing.

A useful call to action (CTA) does not always mean “Book a sales call.” A student may invite feedback on a portfolio. A professional may welcome peer discussions. A consultant may offer to explain an approach. The next step should match the visitor and the goal.

YOUR GOAL	NATURAL NEXT STEP
Job seeker	“Open to data-analysis roles and feedback on my project portfolio.”
Professional	“Happy to exchange ideas about B2B onboarding and customer success.”
Consultant	“If follow-up systems are a challenge, feel free to discuss your current process.”
Founder	“Building in [industry]—always interested in thoughtful customer and partner conversations.”

A real visitor journey: the profile after the comment

Remember Neha from Chapter 01. She comments intelligently on a founder’s post about missed sales follow-ups. The founder visits her profile. Her headline explains she works on sales follow-up workflows. Her About section describes the problem clearly. A project gives evidence of her approach. Only then does a relevant conversation feel natural.

DO THIS

Check your public profile preview, contact information and mobile crop. Keep personal contact details private unless you want them public.

AVOID THIS

Multiple competing calls to action, unsupported claims, confusing job titles and aggressive “DM me now” language.

THE REAL CONVERSION PRINCIPLE

Your profile is not there to force a sale. It is there to help the right visitor decide whether a professional conversation makes sense.

CHAPTER 02 / PUT IT INTO PRACTICE

Your 30-minute profile refresh

You do not need to rebuild your entire profile today. Make the most useful changes first.

TIME	YOUR ACTION
0–5 min	Open your profile in mobile view. Does your photo and headline make sense at first glance?
5–10 min	Replace unclear headline labels with one specific role + area of expertise.
10–20 min	Rewrite the first part of your About section using the five-part structure.
20–25 min	Improve one Experience or Projects entry with a genuine contribution.
25–30 min	Check your skills, evidence and an appropriate way for people to contact or follow you.

Let AI edit your wording—not invent your credentials

COPY-READY PROMPT FOR CHATGPT OR CLAUDE

Act as my LinkedIn profile editor. My actual role or career goal: [ROLE / GOAL]. My audience: [AUDIENCE]. My genuine experience, projects and skills: [FACTS]. Here is my current headline and About section: [TEXT]. Suggest 3 clear headlines and one concise About section. Explain what you changed. Do not invent employers, numbers, clients, degrees or results. Flag anything that needs evidence. Keep my natural writing voice.

The 5-second profile check

- Clear identity Would a relevant stranger understand what you do?
- Relevant proof Can they see at least one true reason to trust your expertise?
- Natural next step Would they know what to do if they wanted to connect?

NEXT CHAPTER / Content That Builds Authority

Your profile now gives people a reason to stay. Chapter 03 will help you share useful ideas so more relevant people have a reason to discover you in the first place.

Platform notes: LinkedIn Help — Create a good profile, Edit your introduction, Add profile sections, Photo & cover requirements, Skills, Featured samples and Request a recommendation. Checked October 2026. Examples are fictional; feature availability may change.

CLIC™ / LINKEDIN FOUNDATION PLAYBOOK

CHAPTER

03

Content That Builds Authority

Share ideas people remember, not just posts people scroll past.

IN THIS CHAPTER

- Choose useful content pillars
- Write from experience and real conversations
- Use engagement-first publishing thoughtfully

Authority is earned through substance and consistency.

CHAPTER 03 / FROM VISIBILITY TO CREDIBILITY

Content That Builds Authority

Be known for how you think—not only for how often you publish.

Picture this: you leave a useful comment on a founder's post. They visit your profile and understand what you do. Later, one of your posts explains a problem they are already facing. That is when content begins doing a valuable job: giving someone a reason to remember your expertise.

COACH RAVIKANT'S CONTENT PRINCIPLE

Do not post just to stay visible. Share an observation, lesson or perspective that the right person can use or remember.

Three jobs for your LinkedIn content

- Demonstrate expertise Show how you think through a relevant problem.
- Start conversations Give people something specific and worthwhile to respond to.
- Create familiarity Help the right audience recognize your interests and strengths over time.

What this means for your goal

YOUR GOAL	WHAT TO SHARE
Find a job	A genuine project lesson, skill demonstration or industry observation.
Grow your career	An insight from your role, a useful framework or a thoughtful perspective.
Find clients	A common customer problem, a practical diagnosis or a process improvement.
Build a brand	Original observations and well-supported opinions within your niche.

COACH RAVIKANT'S FIELD NOTE

A small audience is enough to begin. Your first aim is to publish something a relevant person would find useful—not to go viral.

CHAPTER 03 / WHAT TO TALK ABOUT

Choose three content pillars

A content pillar is simply a subject you want people to associate with your work.

If you post about motivation on Monday, cryptocurrency on Tuesday and recruitment on Wednesday, someone may struggle to understand your professional direction. A few related themes make your thinking easier to follow.

01 TEACH

Explain something your audience wants to understand or do better.

02 PERSPECTIVE

Share what you believe, why you believe it, and where you would respectfully disagree.

03 PROOF

Show real projects, decisions, experiments, lessons or observed results.

Examples for different readers

READER	THREE CONTENT THEMES
Job seeker	Data projects / reporting lessons / questions about real analyst work
Professional	Customer onboarding / cross-team working / lessons from service operations
Consultant	Follow-up systems / common sales-process mistakes / practical process fixes
Founder	Customer discovery / building useful products / lessons from early operations

There is no need to announce your pillars publicly. Use them as a private filter: “Does this post help the audience I want to be known by?” If not, save the idea for elsewhere.

COACH RAVIKANT'S FIELD NOTE

Choose topics where you can contribute a real perspective today. You do not need to pretend to be a senior expert to share a useful beginner-level learning.

CHAPTER 03 / SIGNATURE METHOD

The Conversation-to-Content Loop

Your next useful post may already be hiding inside a relevant discussion.

Instead of opening a blank document and asking, “What should I post?”, start by listening. Read questions and disagreements from your ideal customers, industry peers and knowledgeable competitors. Look for problems that keep appearing.

- Notice a repeated question What are people confused about, struggling with or debating?
- Add your own interpretation What have you actually observed, tried or learned?
- Turn it into a useful post Explain the situation, your perspective and a practical takeaway.

Example: from somebody else’s post to your original idea

YOU NOTICE	YOU CONTRIBUTE
A founder writes: “Our sales team has enough leads, but follow-ups keep slipping.”	You comment: “The missing piece may be ownership. Who is responsible for the next reply?”

YOUR OWN POST IDEA

“A CRM does not solve unclear ownership. Before buying more software, map the three moments where a lead changes hands—and decide who owns the next action.”

You are not reposting the founder’s words as your own. You have taken a public problem, added your original professional analysis and created something independently useful.

Another example: for a job seeker

You notice people debating whether dashboards need complex visuals. In your own post, share a real dashboard you built and explain one design decision you changed after feedback. That is stronger than repeating a generic “top 10 Power BI tips” list.

COACH RAVIKANT'S FIELD NOTE

Never publish confidential client details, private messages or identifying stories without permission. Use anonymized patterns or your own public work instead.

CHAPTER 03 / WRITE WITH CLARITY

A post that people can understand and remember

You do not need elaborate copywriting tricks. Give readers one useful point.

THE SIMPLE FIVE-PART POST FORMAT

OPENING — State a specific observation or problem.

CONTEXT — Explain where the problem appears.

YOUR INSIGHT — Share what you think, observed or tried.

TAKEAWAY — Give one practical lesson people can apply.

INVITATION (OPTIONAL) — Ask a genuine question only if you want to hear other experiences.

Before and after: remove vague language

GENERIC	SPECIFIC
"Consistency is the secret to success. Keep showing up and never give up!"	"If your team misses customer follow-ups, assign one owner to every inquiry before adding another reminder tool."

Three easy ways to open a post

- A surprising observation "A faster reply did not fix our handover problem. Clear ownership did."
- A useful lesson "Here are three things I changed after reviewing my first data dashboard."
- A respectful counterpoint "Posting daily can help some people. For busy specialists, quality and conversation may be a better starting point."

You can use short paragraphs for readability, but you do not have to break every sentence into its own line. Write for a human reader, not for a formatting formula.

THE ONE-IDEA RULE

If you cannot explain the main message of your post in one sentence, simplify it before publishing.

CHAPTER 03 / SEE THE METHOD IN PRACTICE

Two ready-to-study LinkedIn posts

Fictional examples. Use the reasoning and structure—not someone else's biography.

Example A / A consultant shares useful expertise

A SHORT, PROBLEM-LED POST

Not every missed sales opportunity is a lead-generation problem.

Sometimes the enquiry arrives, the team replies—and then no one owns the next step.

In a process-mapping exercise, I found that the most useful question was not "Which CRM should we use?" It was: "Who is responsible when a prospect asks us to call next week?"

Before adding another tool, write down: where the enquiry enters, who responds, and who owns the next follow-up.

Simple ownership can make an existing process easier to manage.

WHY IT WORKS / It names a recognizable problem, offers a practical diagnostic and avoids invented revenue claims or a premature sales pitch.

Example B / A job seeker demonstrates learning

A PROJECT-LED POST

I rebuilt a sales dashboard this week after receiving feedback that it was difficult to read.

My first version had six charts and too many colours. In the next version, I kept three views: sales trend, top categories and month-on-month change.

The biggest lesson was not about Power BI. It was about helping someone answer a business question quickly.

I am sharing this as part of my data-analysis learning journey. What is one dashboard design rule you find useful?

WHY IT WORKS / It shows a real type of project, a specific decision and genuine learning. An early-career professional does not need fake authority to be worth following.

COACH RAVIKANT'S FIELD NOTE

When you use a completed example, replace every achievement and project with something you can personally explain or show.

CHAPTER 03 / BUILD TRUST THROUGH SUBSTANCE

Tell real stories. Show real proof.

A specific experience makes an idea easier to believe.

You can tell a useful professional story without revealing a client name or publishing impressive numbers. Readers often remember a clear situation, a decision and a lesson more than a big claim.

THE SCENE → DECISION → LESSON STORY FORMAT

THE SCENE: "While working on [REAL PROJECT OR RESPONSIBILITY], I noticed [OBSERVATION]."

THE DECISION: "I changed / tested / asked [REAL ACTION] because [REASON]."

THE LESSON: "What I learned was [HONEST INSIGHT]. If you face something similar, consider [USEFUL STEP]."

What counts as proof?

EVIDENCE	PRACTICAL CONTENT IDEA
Client or team work	A permission-safe lesson from a process you improved.
Independent project	What you built, why, and what you would change.
Professional decision	A choice you made and the trade-off behind it.
Learning experiment	What you tested and what you genuinely observed.

Three things that quietly damage trust

- Borrowed success Do not present another person's achievement as your own.
- Manufactured certainty Do not claim "this always works" from one example.
- Hidden promotion Do not turn every personal story into a sales pitch.

COACH RAVIKANT'S FIELD NOTE

You do not need to appear larger than your experience. You need to make the value of your actual experience easier to see.

CHAPTER 03 / COACH RAVIKANT'S SIGNATURE ROUTINE

The Two-Hour Engagement Lead-In

Join relevant conversations before you publish your own post.

Most people open LinkedIn, publish and wait. My recommended alternative is to begin engaging with relevant niche conversations in the two-hour window before your planned post. The window helps you become informed and visible in the right discussions; it is not a verified algorithmic shortcut.

WHEN	WHAT TO DO
About 2 hours before	Review recent posts from target customers, industry peers and ethical competitors.
During that window	Spend 10–15 focused minutes reading and adding a few genuine comments.
Before you publish	Check that your own post adds a distinct idea to the conversation.
After you publish	Reply thoughtfully to actual comments when they arrive.

Choose the right posts to engage with

- Relevant The topic genuinely relates to your expertise or professional objective.
- Recent and active People are discussing the point, not only dropping compliments.
- Worth contributing to You can add one observation, practical example or sincere question.

SKIP	TRY
"Amazing post! Totally agree." repeated under every popular account.	"I agree on response speed. I would also check who owns the next follow-up—otherwise speed alone may not solve it."

COACH RAVIKANT'S FIELD NOTE

This is a practitioner routine to test—not a promise of extra impressions. You do not need to spend two continuous hours on LinkedIn or delay a useful post to satisfy a timer.

CHAPTER 03 / BEYOND THE PUBLISH BUTTON

The comment is part of your content strategy

Thoughtful participation can introduce your thinking to people who have never seen your posts.

A useful comment is a small public demonstration of your expertise. When it creates genuine discussion, the other person may recognize your name, visit your profile or eventually connect. There is no obligation for them to do any of those things.

Three ways to contribute without sounding scripted

APPROACH	EXAMPLE COMMENT
Add a useful layer	"I would add ownership to that list. Who handles the follow-up after the first reply?"
Disagree respectfully	"I see the point. For smaller teams, I have found that clarity can matter more than volume."
Ask a real question	"Which part of the handover tends to break first in your experience?"

When a comment turns into a conversation

Suppose a founder replies to your comment about missed follow-ups. Respond to the question in public first. If the discussion is useful and a professional connection makes sense, send a short note referring to that real exchange—not a generic "I saw your profile" message.

A NATURAL, CONTEXTUAL CONNECTION NOTE

Hi [Name], enjoyed exchanging views on your post about [SPECIFIC TOPIC], especially your point about [REAL DETAIL]. Would be glad to stay connected.

What to do with your own post

- Respond to substance Acknowledge useful disagreements and answer genuine questions.
- Keep a note of recurring themes New questions can become future posts in the Conversation-to-Content Loop.
- Do not demand engagement Avoid automated comments, coordinated exchanges and pressure-based "comment YES" tactics.

COACH RAVIKANT'S FIELD NOTE

You are building familiarity, not engineering fake reciprocity. The goal is better professional conversations, not artificial comment counts.

CHAPTER 03 / PUT IT INTO PRACTICE

Your simple 14-day content start

Two useful posts per week can be a practical starting point. Adjust based on your schedule.

WEEK	FIRST POST	SECOND POST
Week 1	Teach one useful lesson from your work or learning.	Share a genuine opinion on a relevant industry question.
Week 2	Tell a short scene → decision → lesson story.	Answer a question that kept appearing in niche discussions.

On publishing days, begin your engagement lead-in when possible. On other days, spend a few minutes learning from and contributing to relevant conversations. The unified daily routine appears at the end of Chapter 06.

Use AI as an editor—not a substitute for your perspective

COPY-READY PROMPT FOR CHATGPT OR CLAUDE

Act as my LinkedIn writing editor. My professional goal is [GOAL]. My audience is [AUDIENCE]. My genuine experience or observation is [FACTS]. The one message I want to share is [INSIGHT]. Draft a concise LinkedIn post using a real situation, my perspective and one practical takeaway. Give me two possible openings. Do not invent achievements, clients, statistics or personal stories. Avoid generic motivational language and engagement bait. Flag anything I should verify. Keep my natural voice.

How to know whether your content is helping

Review relevant replies, meaningful conversations, profile visits from posts where available, and whether the right people are engaging. Impressions show distribution, not business impact. LinkedIn's post analytics can provide these signals, but availability and estimates vary.

YOUR NEXT ACTION

Choose one audience question. Write one original post from your actual experience. Find two relevant conversations worth contributing to. That is enough to start.

NEXT CHAPTER / Grow the Right Network

You now have a way to show what you know. Chapter 04 will help you decide who deserves your attention and how to build relationships that last.

Platform notes: LinkedIn Newsroom (March & June 2026) on authentic content and comments; LinkedIn Help on post analytics. The two-hour lead-in is Coach Ravikant's recommended routine, not a verified ranking rule. Examples are illustrative.

CLIC™ / LINKEDIN FOUNDATION PLAYBOOK

CHAPTER

04

Grow the Right Network

Be recognized in the conversations that matter.

IN THIS CHAPTER

- Find relevant professionals and decision-makers
- Engage with thoughtful, specific comments
- Move naturally from posts to connections

Contribute first. Connect with context.

CHAPTER 04 / RELATIONSHIPS BEFORE REQUESTS

Grow the Right Network

The goal is not to know everyone. It is to become relevant to the right people.

Imagine a founder scrolling through a post about lost sales enquiries. A consultant leaves a useful comment, adding a perspective the founder had not considered. A few weeks later, the founder recognizes the consultant's name in another discussion. Nothing was sold. A professional relationship may have started.

COACH RAVIKANT'S NETWORKING PRINCIPLE

Do not begin with "How many connection requests can I send?" Begin with "Whose professional world should I understand—and where can I contribute something useful?"

What a useful LinkedIn network should do

- Help you learn Put informed people and relevant industry conversations in your feed.
- Make your expertise visible Allow your genuine comments and work to reach people who care about the subject.
- Create opportunities over time Support introductions, collaborations, job conversations and potential client discussions.

One idea, four professional goals

IF YOUR GOAL IS	BUILD RELATIONSHIPS WITH
Find a job	Alumni, people doing your target job, colleagues and recruiters at relevant firms.
Grow your career	Peers, mentors, cross-functional leaders and respected voices in your field.
Find clients	Potential buyers, their trusted advisers, existing clients and useful collaborators.
Build a brand	Practitioners, industry peers, communities and people discussing your specialty.

COACH RAVIKANT'S FIELD NOTE

Relevance matters more than an arbitrary connection target. The 500+, 1,000 and 30,000 milestones discussed in Chapter 01 do not replace judgment about people.

CHAPTER 04 / FIND THE RIGHT PEOPLE

Build a shortlist worth following

Before trying to meet someone, understand whether they belong in your professional world.

You do not need a paid tool or a large spreadsheet to begin. Use LinkedIn search and the people already appearing in worthwhile discussions. Your first shortlist can be small.

Five practical places to look

- People you already know Former teammates, classmates, past clients, mentors and event contacts.
- Relevant companies People working in roles or departments related to your goal.
- Industry conversations Authors and thoughtful contributors on recent, relevant posts.
- Professional communities People you meet through legitimate groups, events or alumni networks.
- Adjacent experts Professionals whose expertise complements yours, including ethical competitors.

Search example: a B2B operations consultant

A SIMPLE SEARCH PATH

Search for roles such as “Founder”, “Sales Head” or “Operations Lead” in industries you understand. Review relevant company pages and public posts. Look for signs of a real business challenge you can discuss responsibly. Save a short list of people whose work actually connects with your expertise.

Search example: a job seeker

If you want a data analyst role, find analysts at companies you admire and alumni who have taken a similar path. Read what they publish about the work. Learn from those conversations before asking anyone for a referral.

THE THREE-QUESTION RELEVANCE CHECK

1. Is this person relevant to my goal?
2. Can I learn from or genuinely contribute to their conversations?
3. Do I have an honest reason to follow or eventually connect?

COACH RAVIKANT'S FIELD NOTE

Do not collect personal information through scraping tools or export other people’s data without permission. LinkedIn search and manual professional judgment are enough for a beginner.

CHAPTER 04 / DECIDE BEFORE YOU INVITE

Be selective without becoming closed

You can respect someone's work without needing them as a first-degree connection.

LinkedIn separates following from connecting. Following lets you learn from public content. A connection is a two-way relationship with broader communication access. That difference is useful—not a barrier to growth.

SITUATION	BETTER FIRST MOVE
You know and trust the person	Connect; add a short reminder if helpful.
You met at an event or worked together	Connect with a genuine reference to that context.
You admire a stranger's posts	Follow, read and engage thoughtfully first.
A relevant professional replies to your comment	Continue the exchange; consider connecting only if the relationship is welcome.
You notice spam, impersonation or suspicious claims	Do not connect; ignore, block or report as appropriate.

Where to be strict, and where to stay curious

BE STRICT

Identity, trust, suspicious selling, fake profiles, repeated spam and people who disregard boundaries.

BE FLEXIBLE

Career stage, company size, location or job title when there is a genuine shared professional interest.

What about competitors?

Follow competitors and peers when their ideas help you understand the market. Contribute to public discussions when you have something original to add. Do not copy their writing, imitate their personal stories or treat their followers as a contact list to harvest.

A USEFUL DISTINCTION

Potential customers are one part of a good network. Peers, mentors, alumni and collaborators can also create lasting value—even when they never become clients.

CHAPTER 04 / ENGAGE WITH SUBSTANCE

Make your comment worth reading

Your first professional introduction may be a thoughtful public comment.

Before commenting, read the complete post and its context. Choose a subject related to your expertise or genuine interests. Do not comment merely because a post has high numbers or because the author has a large audience.

THE ONE-INSIGHT COMMENT

NOTICE: Identify one specific point from the post.

ADD: Share a genuine observation, example, respectful counterpoint or useful nuance.

INVITE (OPTIONAL): Ask one sincere question if you actually want the answer.

A realistic example

A founder writes: “Speed is the biggest factor in lead follow-up.” You work on sales operations. Here are three different ways to join that discussion.

STYLE	WHAT YOU MIGHT SAY
Build on the idea	“Speed helps, but I would also check ownership. Who is responsible for the second response?”
Disagree politely	“I partly disagree. A fast, irrelevant reply can still lose trust. I would measure relevance alongside speed.”
Ask to learn	“Interesting point. Where do you see most delays: the first response or the handoff after it?”

Skip these habits

- Generic praise Repeating “Amazing post!” rarely adds anything to the conversation.
- Pretend expertise Do not invent client stories or results to sound authoritative.
- Forced disagreement You do not have to challenge every idea to be noticed.

COACH RAVIKANT'S FIELD NOTE

A valuable comment does not entitle you to attention, a reply or a connection. Be prepared for the conversation to end there.

CHAPTER 04 / SIGNATURE RELATIONSHIP STRATEGY

The Post-to-Conversation Bridge

Earn a reason to speak before asking for more of someone's attention.

Meet Neha again, our fictional operations consultant. She is interested in working with growing businesses, but she does not send the same pitch to every founder she finds.

- 1. Find a real discussion A founder posts about missed follow-ups between sales and customer success.
- 2. Make a genuine contribution Neha comments: "I would check who owns the enquiry after the first reply. That handoff often gets overlooked."
- 3. Let the other person respond The founder answers: "Ownership is exactly the problem." Neha replies publicly with one practical question.
- 4. Decide if a connection is appropriate After a useful exchange, Neha may send a short invitation referring to the discussion—if it seems welcome.

A CONTEXTUAL CONNECTION NOTE

Hi [Name], I appreciated our exchange about [REAL POST TOPIC], especially your point on [SPECIFIC DETAIL]. Happy to stay in touch.

What makes this different from cold pitching?

COLD PITCH	CONTEXT FIRST
"Hi, I help companies increase revenue. Can we schedule a call?" sent immediately to a stranger.	A relevant public exchange, then an honest invitation when there is a real reason to stay connected.

If the founder never replies, Neha does not chase a response. She can still follow useful content and participate naturally in future discussions. A relationship cannot be forced by repeating a sequence.

COACH RAVIKANT'S RULE

One genuine conversation is more valuable than ten messages that only look personalized.

CHAPTER 04 / MAKE THE INVITATION SPECIFIC

Connection notes that sound like a person

The right note refers to a real relationship, shared context or actual interaction.

A good note is brief and truthful. You do not need to praise the person, explain your entire business or present your offer. In some accounts, personalized invitation notes are limited; use the options shown in your own LinkedIn invitation screen.

1 / FORMER COLLEAGUE OR CLASSMATE

Hi [Name], good to see you here. We worked together at [REAL COMPANY / PROJECT]. I would be glad to stay connected.

2 / SOMEONE YOU MET RECENTLY

Hi [Name], enjoyed our conversation at [REAL EVENT] about [TOPIC]. Great to continue the connection here.

3 / AFTER A MEANINGFUL POST EXCHANGE

Hi [Name], enjoyed our exchange on your post about [TOPIC]. Your point about [DETAIL] stayed with me. Glad to stay in touch.

4 / EXISTING PROFESSIONAL RELATIONSHIP

Hi [Name], I appreciated collaborating on [REAL PROJECT]. It would be good to keep in touch and follow your work.

For a complete stranger: follow first

If there is no real relationship or recognizable context, follow their public content instead of inventing a reason to connect. If a conversation develops later, refer to that actual interaction. Depending on LinkedIn and recipient settings, messaging options may vary.

COACH RAVIKANT'S FIELD NOTE

These are adaptable examples, not messages to send in bulk. Do not fabricate a meeting, post exchange or shared history. LinkedIn recommends inviting people you know and trust and may restrict unwanted invitations.

CHAPTER 04 / AFTER THEY ACCEPT

A connection is a beginning, not permission to pitch

Keep the relationship human and let the conversation develop at its own pace.

Someone accepting a request does not mean they are interested in your service, job application or offer. A useful next move depends on what brought you together.

Three natural ways to continue

- Continue an existing idea "Thanks for connecting. I kept thinking about your point on [REAL TOPIC]. Have you seen that issue change recently?"
- Offer something relevant, with permission "You mentioned [REAL PROBLEM]. I have a simple resource on [TOPIC]. Would it be useful if I sent it?"
- Keep the relationship open "Great connecting after [EVENT / PROJECT]. I look forward to following your work."

How trust grows in everyday professional life

EARLY STAGE	YOUR BEHAVIOUR
Recognition	They recognize your name or perspective from a relevant interaction.
Conversation	You exchange useful ideas and listen rather than interrogate.
Trust	You show consistency, competence, honesty and respect for their time.
Possible opportunity	A legitimate need or shared project emerges—without obligation.

These are not fixed steps or guaranteed "cold-to-hot" conversion stages. Relationships may develop in a different order, take months or never lead to business. All of those outcomes can be normal.

WHAT NOT TO DO

Do not turn a polite reply into a sales interrogation. Do not send an unsolicited calendar link, brochure or repeated follow-up just because someone accepted your invitation.

CHAPTER 04 / DIFFERENT PEOPLE, DIFFERENT CONTEXT

What good networking looks like for you

The same relationship-first philosophy works across careers and businesses.

READER	A REALISTIC FIRST MOVE
Job seeker	Comment thoughtfully on an analyst's public project, follow their work, then contact an alumni connection you genuinely know.
Working professional	Re-engage a former teammate and join a relevant discussion about an industry challenge you have experienced.
Coach or consultant	Follow ideal customers and adjacent experts, contribute useful views on problems you know and avoid unsolicited sales pitches.
Founder	Engage with potential partners, customers and peers on relevant problems; pursue introductions when the context is genuine.

Also look after the network you already have

- Respond to incoming invitations deliberately Check identity, relevance and context before accepting.
- Keep useful relationships alive Congratulate meaningful milestones or contribute when you truly have something to say.
- Respect a non-response An unanswered invitation or message is not a cue to send a sequence of reminders.
- Protect your professional reputation Ignore, block or report suspicious profiles. Do not exchange engagement artificially.

What if someone is senior or influential?

Do not approach them as a trophy connection. You can learn from their work by following first. A good question or distinctive professional observation can be more memorable than a request for "five minutes of your time."

COACH RAVIKANT'S FIELD NOTE

The best person to connect with is not always the most famous one. Look for relevance, trust and mutual professional context—not a large follower count.

CHAPTER 04 / USE IT THIS WEEK

Make relationship-building a small habit

A good network grows through repeated thoughtful decisions, not a daily invitation quota.

A simple 15-minute networking practice

TIME	PRACTICE
4 minutes	Read recent posts from relevant people you follow.
6 minutes	Add one or two thoughtful comments where your perspective is useful.
3 minutes	Reply to existing conversations or recognize a relevant professional milestone.
2 minutes	Decide whom to follow, or whether a real relationship now merits an invitation.

On busy days, one strong contribution is enough. On publishing days, this practice can be part of the two-hour engagement lead-in from Chapter 03. The complete 30-minute daily routine will appear in Chapter 06.

Use AI to improve a genuine comment—not invent one

A PROMPT YOU CAN PASTE INTO CHATGPT OR CLAUDE

Act as my LinkedIn communication editor. Here is a real post I read: [POST OR SHORT SUMMARY]. My genuine perspective is: [MY VIEW]. My professional background is: [REAL CONTEXT]. Suggest one concise comment that adds useful insight and one respectful question I could ask. Do not invent personal experiences, credentials, achievements or agreement. Avoid flattery, generic praise and sales pitches. I will edit the final comment in my own voice.

YOUR NEXT ACTION

Follow three genuinely relevant people. Read one recent post carefully. Leave one thoughtful comment if you have something useful to say. Reconnect with one person you already know. No mass invitations needed.

NEXT CHAPTER / Turn Connections into Opportunities

You now know how to find relevant people and build familiarity. Chapter 05 will explain how genuine professional conversations can reveal needs and lead to appropriate next steps—without turning every relationship into a sales target.

Platform notes (checked October 2026): LinkedIn Help, “Follow and connect on LinkedIn,” “Personalize invitations to connect,” “Types of restrictions for sending invitations,” and “Automated activity on LinkedIn”; LinkedIn Newsroom, “What We’re Doing to Support Authentic Content and Conversations on LinkedIn” (March 2026). Examples are fictional.

CLIC™ / LINKEDIN FOUNDATION PLAYBOOK

CHAPTER

05

Turn Connections into Opportunities

Let genuine interest guide your next conversation.

IN THIS CHAPTER

- Recognize interest without assuming intent
- Ask useful questions and follow up respectfully
- Present an offer only when it fits

Trust grows when you listen before you offer.

CHAPTER 05 / RELATIONSHIPS CAN CREATE OPPORTUNITIES

Turn Connections into Opportunities

An accepted request is not a lead. A useful conversation might become one.

Imagine that someone has seen your comments, visited your profile and accepted your connection request. What now? The mistake is to treat this as permission to send a brochure. The better move is to understand whether there is a real professional reason to keep talking.

COACH RAVIKANT'S PRINCIPLE

Help people think clearly about a problem before trying to sell them a solution.

What an opportunity can look like

- A possible client A founder describes a problem that fits the work you actually do.
- A career conversation A hiring manager or teammate invites you to discuss a role or project.
- A useful collaboration Someone sees a good reason for you to work or learn together.
- A long-term relationship You exchange useful ideas without an immediate commercial outcome.

The journey is not a sales script

STAGE	WHAT IS REALLY HAPPENING
Cold / unfamiliar	The person does not yet know you or your work. Be relevant, not pushy.
Warm / engaged	You have exchanged ideas or established genuine professional context.
Interested / exploring	They express a relevant need, ask a practical question or request help.
Ready for a next step	Both sides agree that a specific conversation or action is useful.

COACH RAVIKANT'S FIELD NOTE

These are useful descriptions, not labels to assign to strangers. A person can be familiar with you and still have no need for your services. No one owes you a response.

CHAPTER 05 / RECOGNIZE REAL SIGNALS

Interest is not the same as attention

Someone viewing your profile does not mean they want to buy, hire or collaborate.

People may like your post, accept an invitation or compliment your ideas for many reasons. The most useful signal is a specific, voluntary conversation about a need connected to your work.

Read the signal before deciding your next move

YOU NOTICE...	A REASONABLE NEXT MOVE
They like or view your content	Keep sharing useful work. Do not assume personal or commercial interest.
They reply to a relevant comment	Continue that topic if there is something genuine to discuss.
They ask "How would you solve this?"	Offer one useful insight and ask what they have tried.
They describe an active problem	Understand its context; check whether help is welcome.
They ask about your service, work or availability	Explain your offer clearly and suggest an appropriate next step.

Three questions that protect the relationship

- Is the need real? Look for a problem the person actually mentioned, not one you imagined from their job title.
- Am I relevant? Can you genuinely help or point them toward someone better placed to do so?
- Is the conversation welcome? Did they invite a suggestion, request a resource or agree to discuss next steps?

INTEREST-BEFORE-OFFER CHECK

Before mentioning your services, ask yourself: "What has this person actually said that makes my offer relevant?" If the answer is only "they accepted my request," wait.

Practical example: A recruiter liking your post is not a job offer. A recruiter asking to see your portfolio is a concrete opening. Reply with your relevant work and ask what information would be most helpful.

CHAPTER 05 / LEARN BEFORE YOU ADVISE

Ask better questions. Give fewer pitches.

One thoughtful question often tells you more than five paragraphs about your services.

When someone shares a challenge, resist the urge to diagnose everything immediately. First, show that you understood what they meant. Then ask one question that helps both of you see the situation more clearly.

A simple four-question conversation guide

- What is happening? "You mentioned missed follow-ups. Where does the process usually break down?"
- Why does it matter? "What happens when that enquiry is missed?"
- What have you tried? "Have you tested any changes to how enquiries are assigned?"
- Would help be useful? "I have a simple way to map the handoff. Would you like me to share it?"

A HELPFUL REPLY WHEN SOMEONE SHARES A PROBLEM

"That sounds frustrating, especially when [REAL CONSEQUENCE THEY MENTIONED]. Before suggesting anything, can I ask [ONE RELEVANT QUESTION]? It may change what makes sense next."

Avoid turning the conversation into an interview

BETTER	AVOID
Ask one relevant question, listen to the answer and respond with something useful.	Sending a numbered list of qualification questions to someone who never asked for help.

If someone says they are only sharing an observation, respect that. You do not need to turn every interesting discussion into a discovery call.

COACH RAVIKANT'S FIELD NOTE

The fastest way to lose trust is to make someone feel that your curiosity was only a route to your sales pitch.

CHAPTER 05 / SEE THE FULL CONVERSATION

From a relevant post to a welcome next step

Follow Neha, our fictional operations consultant, after the exchange in Chapter 04.

A founder has posted about enquiries being lost between the sales and operations teams. Neha contributed a useful comment. The founder replied, and they later connected. This is where thoughtful progression matters.

- 1 / The founder shares a specific need "We still lose track of enquiries after the first reply. Different people assume someone else owns them."
- 2 / Neha asks one useful question "Is there one person responsible for each enquiry after the first response, or does ownership change between teams?"
- 3 / The founder clarifies the issue "Ownership changes. The handoff is the weak point."
- 4 / Neha shares an idea, not a pitch "A small starting point is to map each handoff and assign one clear owner at every stage. That often makes gaps easier to spot."
- 5 / The founder asks for more "Do you have an example of how to map this?"
- 6 / Neha asks permission "Yes, I can share a simple outline here. Would that be useful?"

ONLY IF THE FOUNDER LATER ASKS ABOUT IMPLEMENTATION

"This is work I help teams set up. If you would like support implementing it, I can explain the usual process and what we would need to understand first. No pressure either way."

WHAT MADE THIS CONVERSATION WORK?

Neha listened, checked the actual problem, contributed something practical and waited for interest before introducing a commercial option.

COACH RAVIKANT'S FIELD NOTE

This is an illustrative scenario, not a client testimonial or a claimed result. It is also fine if the exchange ends after the useful outline.

CHAPTER 05 / FOLLOW UP WITH CONTEXT

Follow up on a conversation, not on a person

A good follow-up reminds someone of the shared topic and gives them an easy choice.

You may have sent a relevant resource, promised an introduction or discussed a possible project. A follow-up can be useful when there is a clear reason. What should not happen is an endless series of "just checking in" messages.

AFTER SHARING A RESOURCE

Hi [Name], following up on the [SPECIFIC RESOURCE] I shared after our conversation about [REAL TOPIC]. Was any part useful? If now is not the right time, no need to reply.

AFTER AGREEING TO REVISIT A TOPIC

Hi [Name], we mentioned reconnecting around [AGREED TIME] about [TOPIC]. Is it still something you would like to discuss, or should we leave it for another time?

AFTER A CAREER CONVERSATION

Hi [Name], thanks again for sharing your perspective on [TEAM / ROLE]. I followed your suggestion and [REAL ACTION TAKEN]. I appreciated the advice and wanted to keep you updated.

When should you stop?

- They say no Thank them and move on. A no is not an invitation to argue.
- They do not reply One context-based follow-up may be reasonable if there was a prior exchange. Then stop unless a new legitimate reason emerges.
- They ask for space Respect it immediately. Do not switch platforms to keep pursuing them.

COACH RAVIKANT'S FIELD NOTE

LinkedIn advises giving people adequate time to respond and avoiding unwanted or automated outreach. Timing is contextual; there is no universal "follow-up on day three" rule.

CHAPTER 05 / THE RIGHT MOMENT TO MAKE AN OFFER

Offer help only when it fits

When a need is clear and the other person welcomes a next step, simplicity wins.

You do not need a clever closing line. State what you can genuinely help with, keep the outcome realistic, and allow the other person to decide whether to continue.

Use the Need → Help → Permission formula

- Need Refer to the problem or goal the person actually described.
- Help Explain one relevant service, project, introduction or practical next step.
- Permission Invite—not pressure—them to learn more or speak further.

A SIMPLE SERVICE INTRODUCTION

"You mentioned [REAL CHALLENGE]. I help [TYPE OF PERSON / TEAM] with [SPECIFIC AREA]. If outside help would be useful, I can explain what working together might look like. Would you like that?"

A JOB SEEKER ASKING ABOUT A REAL OPENING

"Thanks for explaining the role. My recent work on [RELEVANT PROJECT] seems aligned with [SPECIFIC REQUIREMENT]. Would it be helpful if I sent a short portfolio sample?"

If they are not ready

You can still be helpful without offering discounts, inventing urgency or asking for a calendar booking. Sometimes the best reply is: "Understood. I hope the idea was useful—feel free to reach out if it becomes relevant later."

COACH RAVIKANT'S RULE

The offer should feel like the natural answer to a stated need—not the hidden purpose behind every earlier conversation.

CHAPTER 05 / CHOOSE THE NEXT STEP

Not every opportunity is the right fit

A professional next step should work for both sides.

When genuine interest appears, pause before committing. You should understand enough to know whether the conversation is relevant and whether you can be useful. Avoid promising results before reviewing the situation.

The four-point fit check

QUESTION	WHAT TO LOOK FOR
Relevant need	Is the problem or role connected to your real expertise or experience?
Specific next step	Can both people name one sensible action, such as sharing a sample or scheduling a discussion?
Realistic timing	Is the project or career opportunity active now, exploratory, or for later?
Mutual permission	Does the other person want the next step, and are you comfortable offering it?

A small, practical opportunity record

You do not need a complex CRM to begin. A private spreadsheet or notes app is enough. Record only what is necessary, and do not scrape or export private LinkedIn data.

FIVE USEFUL FIELDS (A REFERENCE, NOT A WORKBOOK)

Person / organization • Real conversation context • Their stated goal or need • Agreed next step • Agreed timing or “no follow-up”

What is a good next step?

- For a consultant Ask permission for a focused conversation about scope and fit, not a surprise sales demo.
- For a job seeker Send the relevant CV, portfolio or work sample the other person requested.
- For a founder Explore whether a mutually useful pilot, introduction or partnership discussion makes sense.

COACH RAVIKANT'S FIELD NOTE

A genuine conversation that ends with “not a fit” is not a failure. It protects time, trust and your professional reputation.

CHAPTER 05 / ONE PRINCIPLE, FOUR GOALS

How opportunities differ by your objective

The relationship-first approach stays consistent. Your next move changes.

YOUR GOAL	THE REAL SITUATION	APPROPRIATE ACTION
Find a job	An alum asks about your analytics project after a thoughtful exchange.	Share a real project sample, ask what the team values and request application guidance only if welcome.
Grow your career	A manager responds positively to your view on a workplace process.	Offer to share an example or volunteer for a relevant cross-team discussion.
Find clients	A founder specifically asks how you would solve a follow-up problem.	Ask a relevant question, offer a small insight and discuss services only with permission.
Build your brand	An industry expert references one of your posts in a discussion.	Continue the conversation, share a useful perspective and explore collaboration if there is mutual interest.

A few mistakes to avoid

- Every comment is not a lead Do not build a pipeline from likes, views or polite acknowledgements alone.
- An accepted request is not consent to a pitch Connection status and sales interest are completely different.
- Personalization must be real Never claim you met someone, read something or achieved a result that is not true.
- Trust is not a transaction Keep valuable professional relationships even when no business follows.

A USEFUL WAY TO THINK ABOUT PROGRESS

Track meaningful conversations and agreed next steps rather than counting how many people received your pitch.

CHAPTER 05 / PUT IT INTO PRACTICE

A small opportunity routine you can repeat

You do not need a sales funnel document to practise professional follow-through.

A five-minute conversation review

CHECK	ONE QUESTION TO ASK
Context	What specific interaction brought us into conversation?
Need	Did they clearly express a need, goal or request?
Value	Have I contributed something genuinely useful?
Permission	Have they welcomed a next step—or is it better to wait?

Use AI as a writing editor, not a fake relationship builder

A PROMPT FOR CHATGPT OR CLAUDE

Act as my professional communication editor. Here is a real LinkedIn exchange: [PASTE OR SUMMARIZE ACCURATELY]. The other person explicitly said: [THEIR WORDS]. My actual expertise or experience is: [FACTS]. Help me draft ONE respectful next message that responds to their stated need. If they have not shown interest, suggest a helpful non-sales reply or recommend not messaging. Do not invent facts, pressure the person, or include an unsolicited meeting link. Keep the message natural and brief.

YOUR NEXT MOVE

Find one existing conversation where someone asked a real question or shared a real challenge. Reply with one relevant insight. If they welcome more, agree on one sensible next step. If not, leave the relationship in good standing.

NEXT CHAPTER / Your LinkedIn Growth Discipline

You now have the foundations: a credible profile, useful content, relevant relationships and professional conversations. Chapter 06 brings these together into one manageable daily routine you can follow with discipline.

Sources for platform practices (checked October 2026): LinkedIn Help, “Types of restrictions for sending invitations,” “Alternatives to inviting someone to connect,” and “LinkedIn Messaging - Overview”; Sales Navigator Help, “Sales Navigator usage, limitations, and restrictions.” The dialogue examples in this chapter are fictional.

CLIC™ / LINKEDIN FOUNDATION PLAYBOOK

CHAPTER

06

Your LinkedIn Growth Discipline

Turn the whole playbook into one simple habit.

IN THIS CHAPTER

- Follow the 30-minute daily routine
- Adapt your actions to your main goal
- Review progress and improve each week

Consistency matters most when your actions are relevant.

CHAPTER 06 / MAKE GROWTH A HABIT

Your LinkedIn Growth Discipline

One repeatable routine. Different professional goals. No complicated system.

You have already learned the essentials: make your profile credible, share useful ideas, find the right people, and build real conversations. None of this helps much if you only do it once.

Imagine opening LinkedIn every morning and asking, “What should I do today?” One day you spend an hour scrolling; another day you publish three posts; then you disappear for a week. The problem is not a lack of tips. It is the absence of a sustainable rhythm.

COACH RAVIKANT'S GROWTH PRINCIPLE

Do not build your LinkedIn routine around chasing attention. Build it around becoming useful and recognizable to the right people.

What this chapter gives you

- One daily routine Thirty focused minutes that work for a job search, professional reputation, client conversations or thought leadership.
- One publishing-day variation Use the Two-Hour Engagement Lead-In without spending two continuous hours on LinkedIn.
- One weekly rhythm Create, engage and review without feeling pressure to publish every day.
- One way to measure progress Pay attention to relevant relationships and opportunities—not only vanity metrics.

COACH RAVIKANT'S FIELD NOTE

Your starting goal can change over time. The daily actions stay familiar; only the people, topics and opportunities you prioritize need to change.

CHAPTER 06 / YOUR DAILY SYSTEM

The 30-Minute LinkedIn Growth Routine

Use this on working days as a simple guide, not a quota sheet.

TIME	MOVE	WHAT TO DO
5 min	DISCOVER	Find recent posts and relevant people in the professional world you want to join.
10 min	ENGAGE	Read carefully and leave 1–3 genuine comments when you have something meaningful to add.
5 min	CONNECT	Send a contextual invitation if there is a real reason—or follow someone worth learning from.
5 min	CREATE	Capture one post idea, improve a draft, or publish a post you prepared earlier.
5 min	NURTURE	Reply to conversations, honor promised follow-ups, or review a relevant opportunity.

How this looks in real life

You are a freelance consultant who helps small teams improve sales follow-up. You find a founder discussing missed enquiries. You add one genuine point about ownership, save the question as a future content idea, respond to an existing contact, and only send a connection invitation where a real exchange has happened.

NOT A NUMBERS CONTEST

If there is no useful post to comment on, do not force a comment. If there is no appropriate person to connect with, spend those five minutes learning or nurturing an existing relationship.

The one rule that holds everything together

Every action should support one chosen goal and one relevant audience. Your aim is not five random tasks. It is thirty minutes of coherent professional activity.

COACH RAVIKANT'S FIELD NOTE

Five minutes is enough to maintain a content pipeline, not necessarily to research and write an excellent post from scratch. Prepare substantial posts outside the daily routine when needed.

CHAPTER 06 / ADAPT THE SAME ROUTINE

One habit, four professional paths

Choose one primary outcome. Keep the routine; change its focus.

YOU ARE...	DISCOVER & ENGAGE WITH	CREATE / NURTURE FOR
A job seeker	Hiring teams, alumni, working practitioners and target companies.	Demonstrate a real skill or project; follow up on a welcome career conversation.
A working professional	Peers, respected specialists, mentors and teams in your field.	Share a practical lesson; develop collaborations and internal or external opportunities.
A consultant or coach	Decision-makers, client communities, adjacent experts and collaborators.	Explain a client-type problem without revealing confidential information; nurture real inquiries.
A founder	Potential buyers, partners, industry operators and thoughtful competitors.	Share a grounded business perspective; explore buyer or partner needs with permission.

A concrete difference: one post, four possible actions

A company leader shares a post about the challenges of adopting AI at work.

- Job seeker Ask which skills junior candidates should demonstrate and, if relevant, mention a project you actually completed.
- Professional Share one lesson from introducing a new process at work—without exposing private company information.
- Consultant Add a specific observation about workflow design and learn which obstacles the author sees most often.
- Founder Contribute a thoughtful view on adoption costs or team readiness from your own business context.

FOCUS BEATS VOLUME

A good routine asks “Am I consistently present in conversations that matter to my goal?” not “How many strangers did I contact today?”

CHAPTER 06 / PUBLISHING DAY VARIATION

The Two-Hour Engagement Lead-In

Start participating before you publish. Do not turn it into a magic timing rule.

Coach Ravikant recommends beginning relevant engagement in the two-hour window before your planned post. This is a practical awareness and relationship habit—not a verified LinkedIn rule that guarantees additional impressions.

Example: You plan to publish at 12:00 noon

APPROX. TIME	WHAT HAPPENS
10:00–10:15	Read recent relevant posts by customers, peers or respected specialists. Add one or two thoughtful comments where you have a genuine perspective.
Before 12:00	Review your drafted post. Check the facts, examples, clarity, tone and relevance to your chosen audience.
12:00	Publish if your content is ready. Do not delay a good post just to hit a rigid two-hour rule.
After publishing	Return to real comments and continue conversations when people engage.

What makes this valuable?

- You listen first Recent discussions show what your audience actually cares about.
- You contribute before asking for attention A useful comment may help people understand how you think.
- You improve your own post The conversation may reveal a missing example, question or counterpoint.

IMPORTANT DISTINCTION

The two-hour window is when you begin engaging—not two hours of continuous commenting. Genuine value matters more than clock-watching.

COACH RAVIKANT'S FIELD NOTE

Avoid reciprocal-engagement groups, automated comments and artificial interactions. LinkedIn explicitly limits inauthentic engagement. Never assume that people owe you likes because you commented on their posts.

CHAPTER 06 / KEEP THE WEEK MANAGEABLE

A weekly rhythm you can repeat

The daily thirty minutes continue. Each day simply has a useful emphasis.

DAY	A GOOD FOCUS	ONE PRACTICAL MOVE
Monday	Listen and plan	Read niche discussions and select one real question you can answer this week.
Tuesday	Teach something useful	Publish or prepare a practical lesson rooted in actual knowledge or experience.
Wednesday	Build relationships	Spend extra attention on existing exchanges and appropriate professional introductions.
Thursday	Share a perspective	Publish or prepare a grounded opinion, story, example or respectful counterpoint.
Friday	Review and nurture	Reply to unfinished conversations, keep your promises and notice what worked.

How often should you post?

For someone just beginning, one or two well-considered posts per week can be a manageable starting point. Increase or decrease based on your available time, the quality of your ideas and whether the activity supports your goal. This is a planning recommendation—not a guaranteed optimal posting frequency.

A small habit that saves hours

KEEP A ONE-LINE IDEA NOTE ON YOUR PHONE

"The conversation was about [TOPIC]. The useful question was [QUESTION]. My real perspective is [MY VIEW]. A future post could explain [ONE LESSON]."

COACH RAVIKANT'S FIELD NOTE

Consistency is easier when you stop inventing new content ideas from a blank screen. Let the questions you hear become the ideas you develop.

COACH RAVIKANT'S FIELD NOTE

Weekends can be optional. Rest is part of a sustainable routine. Do not publish content or message people just to protect a streak.

CHAPTER 06 / FIRST MONTH

Your 30-Day LinkedIn Starter Plan

Use the same thirty-minute routine while building one capability each week.

WEEK	MAIN FOCUS	WHAT "DONE" LOOKS LIKE
1 / FOUNDATION	Review your profile, choose one audience and begin your daily discovery and engagement habit.	Your profile clearly explains your role, your value and a relevant next step.
2 / VISIBILITY	Develop two useful content ideas, publish when ready and participate in relevant conversations.	You have at least one substantive piece of work or a post to stand behind.
3 / RELATIONSHIPS	Notice recurring contributors, follow the right people and connect where real context exists.	You can name several people and conversations relevant to your actual goal.
4 / OPPORTUNITY	Respond thoughtfully, make reasonable follow-ups, assess useful signals and review progress.	You know what to repeat, improve or stop during the next month.

You do not have to "finish" LinkedIn in thirty days

A job seeker may have better conversations without receiving an interview yet. A consultant may learn what potential buyers care about without closing a client. A professional may build recognition through repeated thoughtful participation. These are different stages of progress, not failed promises.

ONE SENSIBLE FIRST-MONTH GOAL

Complete the routine on most working days, create a credible presence and collect enough real feedback to decide what deserves more attention.

COACH RAVIKANT'S FIELD NOTE

Do not make a job, lead, follower or revenue guarantee. Results vary with professional experience, market demand, relevance and consistency.

CHAPTER 06 / MEASURE THE RIGHT THINGS

Know whether your effort is helping

The most useful measure depends on the reason you came to LinkedIn.

At the end of each week, spend five to ten minutes reviewing a few observable signals. You can use the analytics LinkedIn makes available to your account plus a short note of meaningful conversations. A sophisticated dashboard is unnecessary.

SIGNAL	WHAT IT CAN TELL YOU
Relevant profile visits	People may be curious about who you are. A visit alone is not a lead.
Quality of replies	Your ideas are creating discussion, questions or useful disagreement.
Relevant new contacts	Your network is getting closer to the people who matter for your goal.
Meaningful conversations	You are exchanging substance—not just greetings or generic praise.
Agreed next steps	A person has voluntarily requested a sample, discussion, application, introduction or resource.

The Friday five-minute reflection

FOUR QUESTIONS (ANSWER PRIVATELY IN ONE OR TWO LINES)

What conversation mattered most?
Which content or comment brought a useful response?
Did I help or learn something genuinely valuable?
What will I do more of—or stop doing—next week?

DO NOT CONFUSE REACH WITH RELEVANCE

Ten thousand impressions from the wrong audience may be less useful than a thoughtful exchange with one person who genuinely matters to your goal.

COACH RAVIKANT'S FIELD NOTE

Do not mistake a weekly fluctuation for a trend. Compare several weeks, and keep track of the context behind each result.

CHAPTER 06 / KEEP IT HUMAN

Use AI to assist, not to impersonate you

The routine works because your judgment, perspective and relationships are real.

AI can organize your notes, help edit a post, or suggest a clearer sentence. It cannot replace reading the original post, having a genuine opinion or respecting someone else's boundaries.

WEEKLY REVIEW PROMPT FOR CHATGPT OR CLAUDE

Act as my LinkedIn growth coach and honest editor. My primary goal is [JOB / CAREER / CLIENTS / BRAND]. This week I published [FACTUAL SUMMARY], engaged in [REAL CONVERSATIONS], and noticed [OBSERVATIONS / RESULTS]. Suggest ONE improvement to my audience focus, ONE content idea grounded in these observations, and ONE relationship-building action for next week. Separate evidence from assumptions. Do not invent interactions, achievements or performance figures. Do not recommend automated comments, mass invitations or spam.

When discipline slips

- Too busy to post? Use your five-minute Create block to save an idea. Publishing can happen another day.
- No suitable person to connect with? Follow useful content or deepen an existing relationship rather than sending a random invitation.
- Low impressions this week? Review audience relevance and the substance of the post before chasing a posting-time trick.
- No replies? Stay respectful. Improve your contribution; do not escalate to repeated unsolicited messages.

COACH RAVIKANT'S FIELD NOTE

For confidential client discussions or private company information, summarize the lesson without revealing personal or sensitive details to an AI tool.

CHAPTER 06 / KNOW YOUR NEXT STEP

A foundation you can use on your own

You have the playbook. The next stage is applying it in your own professional world.

You do not need a perfect strategy, expensive software or thirty thousand connections to begin. You need a clear identity, something useful to say, people worth learning from and a routine you can maintain.

Do it yourself—or get implementation support

You can follow this playbook independently. If your challenge later becomes execution—rewriting your profile, developing content, building a relevant outreach process or setting up simple AI-supported workflows—Coach Ravikant and the CLIC ecosystem can help with tailored implementation.

Want help implementing this? Message our consultation support team on WhatsApp. A representative will learn about your goals and assess mutual fit before suggesting a consultation.Chat with consultation support

THE RIGHT TIME TO ASK FOR HELP

When you understand the next step but lack the time, capability or resources to implement it consistently, expert support can be valuable. It is optional—not a condition for using this book.

Your one-page routine comes next

Save the final page on your phone or keep a copy by your desk. It is the only operating reference you need to begin. Return to the individual chapters whenever you need the reasoning, examples or message templates.

Platform practices checked October 2026: LinkedIn Newsroom, “What We’re Doing to Support Authentic Content and Conversations on LinkedIn” (13 March 2026) and “Keeping conversations real on LinkedIn” (4 June 2026); LinkedIn Help, “Automated activity on LinkedIn.” Practitioner timing and activity suggestions in this chapter are not LinkedIn ranking rules.

YOUR DAILY QUICK REFERENCE / SAVE THIS PAGE

The 30-Minute LinkedIn Growth Discipline

One simple habit for visibility, relationships and meaningful opportunities.

MINUTES	ACTION	ASK YOURSELF
05	DISCOVER	Where are my ideal people having useful conversations today?
10	ENGAGE	Can I add one specific, genuine perspective?
05	CONNECT	Is there a real professional reason to follow or connect?
05	CREATE	What useful idea can I capture, improve or publish?
05	NURTURE	Who deserves a thoughtful reply or agreed follow-up?

On a publishing day

Begin relevant engagement during the two-hour window before publishing, when practical. Ten to fifteen minutes of genuine participation may be enough. This is a working method to test, not an algorithm promise.

At the end of the week

Ask: Did I become more useful to the right people? What meaningful conversations happened? What will I repeat, improve or stop next week?

COACH RAVIKANT'S CLOSING RULE

Be visible where your people are. Contribute before you ask. Build trust through substance. Let opportunities grow from genuine relevance.

PUBLICATION & USAGE TERMS

Copyright, Trademark & Permitted Use

Ownership

© 2026 Coach Ravikant Rathor. All rights reserved. The original text, structure, illustrations, selection and arrangement of this playbook are protected to the extent permitted under applicable copyright law. CLIC™ is used as a brand trademark; the ™ symbol does not claim registration.

Your personal-use licence

A legitimate purchaser may read this playbook and adapt individual prompts, message formats and templates for their own personal or internal professional use. This limited permission does not transfer copyright or trademark ownership.

No unauthorized republication or rebranding

Without prior written permission, you may not distribute, sell, share, publish, translate, substantially reproduce, or rebrand this publication or a substantially similar derivative version for others. You may not submit the entire playbook or substantial extracts to an AI system with the purpose of recreating, rewriting, packaging or distributing a competing or rebranded edition. These restrictions are subject to exceptions and other rights granted by applicable law.

Educational scope

This is independent educational material. It is not affiliated with, sponsored by or endorsed by LinkedIn. Platform features, limits and interfaces can change. Examples are illustrative and do not promise leads, employment, reach, or revenue.

Permissions

For implementation enquiries, contact the consultation support team using the verified WhatsApp link on the next page. For permissions or licensing, request an appropriate contact through the same channel.

GET SUPPORT & STAY CONNECTED

Your next step, made easy

Choose the right channel. The CLIC™ team will help you find the next step that fits your needs.

01 Foxxy Digital Tools — Sales & Product Assistance

Questions about digital tools, offers, access and pricing.

+91 9918991805 • Open WhatsApp sales chat

02 Coach Ravikant — Consultation Enquiries

Discuss your objectives, implementation needs, budget and mutual fit with a representative.

+91 8595109750 • Request a suitability discussion

03 Join the Foxxy WhatsApp Community

Stay informed about digital tools, availability and current offers.

Official invite • Join the WhatsApp community

A consultation with Coach Ravikant is not booked automatically. Our team first discusses whether the engagement is appropriate for both sides.

CLIC™ / LINKEDIN FOUNDATION PLAYBOOK • COACH RAVIKANT

CLIC™ / LINKEDIN FOUNDATION PLAYBOOK

THANK YOU FOR READING.

You now have the foundation. The next step is to use it.

- Build visibility through substance.
- Grow your network through relevance.
- Create opportunities through trust.

YOUR NEXT MOVE

Follow the 30-minute routine for the next 30 days. Return to the chapters whenever you need a real example, an idea or a template.

NEED PERSONALIZED IMPLEMENTATION SUPPORT?

Coach Ravikant and the CLIC™ ecosystem can help you build a system tailored to your goals. Connect through the official professional channels when you are ready.