START HERE / 3 MINUTES

Before you begin

Sales Navigator helps you research and organize relevant professional relationships. It does not create trust or close deals for you.

Who gets the most value?

Consultants, founders, service providers and B2B sales professionals who need to identify companies and decision-makers. Job seekers can learn from research features, but Sales Navigator is primarily a sales product.

What you should have ready

Your LinkedIn account, access to the Sales Navigator Advanced seat included in your offer, a clear target customer, and 20–30 minutes a day. Use only authorized access assigned to your own account.

CHOOSE ONE TARGET

Example: “I help founders of 10–200-person Indian service businesses improve sales follow-up.” Use your actual expertise and a customer group you can serve.

Important about activation

This is a usage guide, not a license or activation voucher. Your seller or provider should supply the authorized access instructions, duration, renewal/billing terms and expiry information for your specific offer. Never share your LinkedIn password with a reseller or support representative.

What success looks like after 7 days

A relevant prospect shortlist, a saved search, selected accounts to watch, and a few thoughtful interactions—not a promised number of leads or appointments.

Feature availability can vary by account, permissions, subscription settings and changing LinkedIn interface labels.

WEEK ONE / SEARCH

Days 01–02: Find the right people

Start with a narrow audience, not a large list.

DAY 01 Define your ideal prospect

Write a one-line description of the buyer you can genuinely help. Include the type of business, relevant job role, location, and problem you understand.

- Example buyer: Founders or Heads of Sales at Indian B2B service companies with 11–200 employees.
- The problem: Leads arrive, but follow-up ownership and consistency are unclear.
- Why you: You have credible experience improving sales processes.

DAY 02 Build your first lead search

Open Sales Navigator → Lead search or Lead filters. Try relevant filters such as geography, seniority/function, company headcount and current company. Search screen names may vary.

- Begin with 2–3 filters; inspect whether the results are truly relevant.
- Review 10–15 profiles manually. Do not assume every title match is a qualified prospect.
- Save a search that consistently finds people worth knowing.

COPY-READY SEARCH RECIPE

Industry: B2B services | Geography: India | Seniority: Owner / CXO / Director | Company size: 11–200 | Profile check: genuine relevance to your service.

Avoid: assuming that everyone who appears in a search needs your service.

WEEK ONE / RELATIONSHIPS

Days 03–04: Save, study, engage

Your shortlist becomes useful only when you learn who these people are.

DAY 03 Save 10 relevant leads

Save promising people and, when useful, their companies. Group them into a list such as “Sales Process — India”. Your goal is clarity, not volume.

- For each lead, note: their role, what their company does and one topic they care about.
- Remove poor-fit profiles even if they have impressive titles.
- Check saved-lead alerts and company updates when available.

DAY 04 Turn research into familiarity

Look at public recent posts from a few saved prospects and industry peers. Choose one discussion where you have a genuine view.

EXAMPLE: A COMMENT THAT EARNS ATTENTION

“The follow-up issue you mentioned often becomes an ownership issue as teams grow. I have seen that defining the handoff matters as much as having a CRM. How does your team manage that transition?”

When to connect

If a useful exchange happens, send a short contextual invitation where the product interface permits. If not, keep learning or following their work. Never pretend a relationship exists.

The objective is professional familiarity—not automatic reciprocation, or mass commenting to trigger attention.

WEEK ONE / ADVANCED TOOLS

Days 05–06: Find signals, share value

Explore the additional capabilities of Advanced only after you understand the underlying need.

DAY 05 Review alerts and Buyer Intent

Check saved lead/account updates for relevant job changes, company news or engagement. If Buyer Intent is enabled for your account, explore which accounts show interest signals. Treat these as clues to investigate, not proof someone wants to buy.

- Useful signal: a leadership change at a target company. Read about the company before reaching out.
- Not enough on its own: a “buyer intent” badge without context or a related problem.
- Buyer Intent may require administrator setup or other eligibility conditions.

DAY 06 Explore Smart Links, if available

Smart Links let eligible Advanced users share a useful resource and see engagement. Choose something genuinely relevant—for example, a short case study or practical guide—and send it only when the recipient would welcome it.

PERMISSION-FIRST MESSAGE

“You mentioned challenges with enquiry follow-up. I have a short checklist that might help your team spot where ownership is unclear. Would you like me to share it?”

If there is no interest, do not chase a Smart Link view or treat content consumption as consent to sell. Some features can be disabled by admins.

WEEK ONE / YOUR ROUTINE

Day 07: Turn exploration into a habit

By now you have explored the essentials. The objective is to keep the process simple.

DAY 07 Review your shortlist

Look at the people and accounts you saved. Keep those that genuinely fit your target. Identify a few worthwhile relationships and decide what would be helpful—not pushy—to do next.

THE 30-MINUTE SALES NAVIGATOR ROUTINE

TIME	FOCUS	ACTION
05	Discover	Check saved searches or priority account updates.
10	Study & engage	Read relevant posts and add a thoughtful comment only when useful.
05	Connect	Send a contextual request or follow a genuinely relevant person.
05	Create	Capture an idea or improve a helpful resource or post.
05	Nurture	Reply to welcome conversations and agreed follow-ups.

For the rest of your month

Keep the same audience focus. Refresh your shortlist weekly, review alerts for context, share useful content, and build relationships. Evaluate conversations and qualified opportunities—not just profiles saved.

COACH RAVIKANT'S RULE

Use premium research to find better context. Use your own judgment and genuine expertise to earn the relationship.

QUICK REFERENCE / USE ON YOUR OWN

Copy, customize, and stay human

Three short templates and one AI prompt you can reuse immediately.

1. Connection after a real interaction

“Hi [Name], enjoyed our exchange on your post about [topic], especially your point on [specific idea]. I would be glad to stay connected.”

2. A thoughtful follow-up

“Hi [Name], your earlier point about [topic] stayed with me. I came across [relevant idea/resource]. Would it be useful if I shared it?”

3. Offering help when interest exists

“You mentioned [problem]. I work on [relevant capability]. If useful, I can explain a simple way to approach it—or connect you with someone better placed to help.”

AI RESEARCH-ASSISTANT PROMPT

“Act as my research editor. My ideal customer is [PERSONA]. Here are notes from a real public profile and post: [NOTES]. Identify the person’s likely professional priorities as hypotheses, suggest two respectful questions I could ask, and one useful comment grounded in my actual expertise [EXPERTISE]. Do not invent facts, experiences or hidden buying intent.”

Three mistakes to avoid

Do not automate profile scraping or generic messages. Do not pitch based only on a job change or intent alert. Do not share account credentials or confidential company information with AI tools.
